A real estate transaction of considerable interest took place Monday when Max Zallen of Auburn became the owner of the property of the late Mrs. Cora Robertson on Main Street. It is reported that a modern motion picture theatre will be erected on this lot and that work will be started soon.

RUTH CHATTERTON IN "PYGMALION" AT DEERTREES NEXT WEEK

For the seventh week of his second annual drama festival at the Deertrees Theatre in Harrison, Bela Blau announces that he will present the lovely star of the stage and screen, Ruth Chatterton, in George Bernard Shaw's immortal comedy-drama, "Pygmalion," for one week only beginning Monday evening, Aug. 19. In the famous role of Eliza Doolittle, the flower-girl who, through the phonetic teaching of Professor Henry Higgins, rose from the squalor of Covent Garden to the elegance of Buckingham Palace, Miss Chatterton makes her first and exclusive Maine appearance, adding still another triumphant characterization to her already notable career.

G. B. Shaw's brilliant play about a modern Pygmalion and his cockney Gaiety is known and loved by theatregoers all over the world, and provides a particularly happy vehicle for the talents of the lovely Miss Chatterton, who returned to the Broadway stage this year after a long sojourn in Hollywood, devoted to picture-making. The part of Professor Henry Higgins in "Pygmalion" will be played by the handsome and talented actor, Barry Thompson, who has been appearing throughout the country with Miss Chatterton as her leading man. Included in the cast of "Pygmalion" are Richard Temple, Alice Johns, Grace Mills, and other distinguished actors and actresses recruited from the New York stage.

Joe E. Brown concludes his engagement in "Elmer The Great" at Deertrees this Saturday night. Ruth Chatterton in "Pygmalion" will play at Deertrees six evenings beginning Monday, Aug. 19, with matinees on Wednesday and Friday. Following Miss Chatterton in "Pygmalion," Bela Blau will present for the week of Aug. 26, the scintillating leading lady of the American stage, Florence Reed, in her greatest starring triumph "The Shanghai Gesture."

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Myers have as their guests his mother, Mrs. Mary Myers, and sister, Miss Elizabeth Myers of Orono.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Allen were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Young at their cottage at Howard Pond.

Misses Margaret Hamlin and Mona McLaughlin, of the staff of the Maine Eye and Ear Infirmary at Portland are spending the week with Miss Hamlin's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Hamlin.

Mr. and Mrs. Adney Gurney and daughter Eleanor have returned home after spending a week in camp at Howard Pond. They had as guests Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spink and two children of Lowell, Mass.

Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Flu were Mrs. Nellie Walker and Robert Bruce, sister and brother of Mrs. Flu; her niece and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wheeler, and family of Amesbury, Mass.

Nearly $11 was received at the "barn fitch party" for the benefit of the Ladies' Aid at the home of Mrs. Carrie Merrill last Thursday evening. Seven tables were in play. Prizes for high score were won by Mrs. Ada Tyler and Earl Davis. Consolation prizes went to Miss Hope Bean and M. A. Gordon.

TWO ESCAPE WHEN EXPLOSION AND FIRE GUT BENNETT GARAGE

Two men miraculously escaped injury this morning when fire following a gasoline explosion gutted the new garage of Clarence Bennett at the corner of Main and Elm Streets. Leroy Bennett Jr. and Arthur Gray made their way through the blaze and brushed the flames from their clothing. The fire department made quick work of extinguishing the fire which in the few minutes before their arrival had spread throughout the building. With three residences within a distance of less than 100 feet and with several smaller explosions as the blaze extended the effective job of firefighting was very gratifying.

In the repair room were a Chevrolet truck belonging to Everett Merrill and the Chevrolet coupe of Leslie Poore. Nothing was removed from the building and apparently everything is a total loss.

The 36x60 ft. building was built last year at a cost of about $3,000 and was completely outfitted with new equipment. It consisted of a repair shop, office and show room. Fortunately there was no car in the show room at the time. The entire loss, estimated at $5,000, is only partly covered by insurance.

Mr. Bennett plans to rebuild at once.

A telephone cable, carrying toll circuits and many local lines, passed within a few feet of the building. Several feet of the cable were melted and many lines disabled. Temporary wires were put in service at once for the doctors and long distance lines, and a crew from Lewiston will have the cable repaired by five o'clock.

JORDANS ENTERTAIN S. OF U. Y. AND AUXILIARY

Members of Sons of Union Veterans and Auxiliary were entertained at the camp of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jordan at Songo Pond Wednesday evening. A picnic supper was enjoyed. Those present besides Mr. and Mrs. Jordan were: Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. Alton Hutchinson, Mrs. Belle Hutchinson, Erwin Hutchinson, Mrs. Florence Douglass, Mrs. Lillian Coolidge, Miss Barbara Coolidge, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hutchinson, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Lapham, Carlton Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Asa Bartlett, L. A. Sumner, Fred F. Bean.

YE CAMPAIGN: Roars On

Boss Ed Flynn of the Bronx, a man with a surprisingly fine library, who likes to read, took Jim Farley's place as national chairman of the Democrats. He was the same general type as Farley, with a similar background, except that Farley was a country boy, and Boss Flynn was a city laddie. Like Farley, Flynn is respected around New York, and well liked by many.

Willkie came out and said he would not get into personal arguments with members of congress, individual hecklers, or anybody like that. Willkie went on to say he had very determined views about conscription, and about helping the Bullmen abroad, but he wouldn't admit what those views were. Some Republicans remarked that they felt they had signed a blank check made out to Wendell Willkie esquire. And yet, more than 90 per cent of the newspapers of the United States were supporting him against the III term. More and more, people were showing themselves anti-Roosevelt, rather than pro-Willkie.

Dilemma

An evidence of this was the continued drift of Democrats, over to the Republican fold. As each Demo moved over, Roosevelt would denounce him, but still they moved. Lewis Douglas, Roosevelt's erstwhile budget director, had been one of the first. Now came Edmund Toland, counsel to the house committee, investigating the National Labor Relations board. Toland resigned, in order to work for Willkie. Mrs. Dwight Morrow, acting president of Smith college, wired Willkie that her immediate family was delivering five pro-Wendellite votes. On the other hand, a fair number of liberal Republicans were none too sure about Willkie. They stressed his "non-savory" background, and his "anglophile" war expositions.

THE WAR:

Aircraft

While the world waited wearily for the German invasion of England, air fighting raged to and fro between the Royal air force and the Goering flying circus. The Germans forced the port of London, biggest in the entire world, to close, and also the ports of Newcastle on Tyne, Hull, and Newcastle. This meant that all sorts of commodities had to be unloaded in the still solvent west of England, and shipped east, which dislocated the British timetable no end.

On the other hand, the British claimed they had peppered Hamburg to a really serious degree. This is Germany's third biggest city—after Berlin and Vienna—and by far the friendliest city to England of them all. Its inhabitants speak a local dialect closely akin to Anglo-Saxon, and its sea-going and commercial ties with John Bull have always been strong. After the Napoleonic wars, Hamburg's republican senate petitioned England to take them over.

Bremen, Hamburg's sister city, also got it in the neck, but not so bad. So did Duesseldorf, Essen, Wesel, and Dulsburg, in the valley of the river Rhine. Essen is the German Pittsburgh, where the vast complex of the Krupp works spreads out. It is an easy aerial target. Sheffield, the English equivalent of Essen and Pittsburgh, was scheduled to be "next" on the list, while Welsh Cardiff and English Portsmouth were reportedly already badly gutted. One ex-Englisher was excited by all this. He was living in faraway Chicago, but he bought a Spitfire fighter and presented it to his home town: Leamington Spa, in Warwickshire.

Anti-Aircraft

In the German service, the anti-aircraft department is an integral part of the Goering flying circus, which is an independent branch of the national defense, co-equal with army and navy. (In the American service, anti-aircraft is part of the army's coast artillery.) During the first 11 months of the present war, the crack German anti-aircraft brought down 1,230 enemy planes, knocked out more than 400 tanks, sank 10 ships, and damaged 10 more of them.

The Catch

There is a catch to all this aerial warfare, between the British island fortress and the long seacoast under Germanic domination. It is this: the Germans do their air raiding by day, and the British do it by night. Air raiding by day is much more dangerous to the flyers, but it is also much easier to hit land targets when the sun is up. Night bombing is safer for the pilots, but it is far harder to "reach" the objectives. This accounts for the much heavier German air losses. The Germans outnumber the British in the air by perhaps 3 to 1, so they can afford to "take" it. The Royal air force has to be economical in its expenditure of men and machines.

U. S. ARMY Parachutes

At Hightstown, N. J., some 48 infantry regulars from Fort Benning, Ga., gave a parachute jumping demonstration from two 125-foot steel towers. High army officers looked on with grave attention, for it was sensational stuff in the line of troop training. The Benning infantry jumped in four "easy" stages, like this:

Stage 1 was a drop in an open parachute, equipped with a comfortable seat. That wasn't so bad at all. Stage 2 was a drop in an open parachute, with harness instead of a seat. Stage 3 was a "free" drop with an open parachute, and stage 4 was a "free" drop with a packed parachute, which had to be opened up in the air. In any man's country—Russia aside, for some reason—it is none too easy to recruit parachute jumpers. Goering, in Germany, had to start it off by using the daredevils ("mordskerls") of his own bodyguard. Even these toughies grumbled, the first time up and down.

'Headache'

Meanwhile, the U. S. army had a new headache. It found that its 800 best airplane reservists were working on the wide network of American commercial and transport airlines. Here they are vitally needed, and so is the flying equipment. Some of these topnotch civil pilots are military, some are naval, and some are marines, but all of them will have to stay—in case of war—right where they are. This was the U. S. general-staff verdict.

COMMONS:

It Laughs

The house of commons, at Westminster, is pretty grim these days. But it got a good laugh for once. One member announced that no less than 14 Italian submarines had been sunk by the British navy in the Mediterranean. In Parliament, there is a rough and tough Scotch Labor deputy named J. J. Davidson, who loves to wise-crack the Tories and the "furriners." When he heard about the submarines, he yelled out: "Is it true the British sailors at sea, only have to call out, 'waiter!' and Italian subs come to the top?"

But the Italians had an answer. They were actually shipping "pocket" submarines over the Alps, to help Hitler in the English channel operations. Once the great Hannibal of Carthage shipped his elephants over the Alps to harry the Italians, and now the Italians were turning the same fantastic trick with their fiery sea-serpents. And strangely enough, historians have always referred to England as the "modern" Carthage, because of its shipping, banking, colonizing and trading.

SPORTS:

Porkers

The Wimbledon tennis club, in England, is the best known in the entire world. Every American champ and she-champ has played there on the green turf. It is glamorous and top-drawer. It was announced that the Wimbledonians would turn to pig-breeding for the duration of the war, and would deal in porkers instead of lob-lolles and back-hands. It was revolutionary, and it certainly wasn't cricket, or tennis either. It seemed that the Davis cup was turning into a bitter cup of misery, to be drained by a new champ, the great god Mars. So with English polo, as well. Its fields were plowed up!

Britons are good sports. England needs aluminum, and needs it bad. One veteran of the last war turned in his aluminum false leg, to a scrap metal depot at Windsor. He wanted to hold off Hitler, just as much as the fancy Wimbledonians did. Meanwhile, there was a lot of talk about equipping parts of the British army with steel breastplates, and helmet visors, to bounce off shell splinters, which was one back-step more toward the dark ages of Ironsides, Ironpants, and Ironheads. At the battle of Bull Run, in 1861, some of our own New York militia wore bullet-proof vests. But they proved so heavy, that the New Yorkers threw them aside when they ran away. They were not such good sports.

Gorillas

Alfred was an Anglo-gorilla at the Bristol zoo. He is worth $3,000 and weighs 426 pounds net. He eats $12 per week in foodstuffs, and is said to be the longest lived gorilla in captivity. Keepers say he's just as good a sport as the fellow with the aluminum leg. But Alfred's too expensive to keep up, and if somebody doesn't adopt him, he'll get shot. Nobody in England likes that prospect. One man wrote the Bristol zoo, and said: "Why don't you ship him to America, with all the other Hapsburgs." Simultaneously, 3,000,000 dogs were being slaughtered in Germany, to save food. Poor dogs; poor Alfred; poor Hapsburg!

U. S. PEACE:

What They Want

In the Tenth New Jersey congressional district, Congressman Fred Hartley conducted a straw vote. He sent out blanks to 110,000 voters, and 51,000 answered. This mob voted stay-out-America, by 97 per cent. The other 3 per cent were high-society people from fashionable Glen Ridge. Most of the 97 per cent were from Newark, or its suburbs.

Some 70 per cent of these people favored universal military training, without knowing much about it. About 97 per cent were for the present rearmament program. It was acknowledged locally that Congressman Hartley had performed a useful public service, and a truly patriotic one. Adjacent North Jersey is the country's No. 1 industrial zone, and how the Jerseymen feel these days, is of primary United States importance. The Hartley poll also attracted significant attention in England: London "please noted"

NICE NAMES:

Pretty Cute

Liberty, equality, fraternity have vanished from la belle France, and they have vanished from Washington, D. C., too. Only, in this case, liberty, equality, fraternity are attractive young ladies. They have gone on vacation.

Their father, former president-commissioner of Puerto Rico, is Santiago Iglesias. The complete list of his Hispanic daughters includes: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, Justice, Light, Peace, and America. On their vacations, these virtues will scatter widely. Light is off for Mexico, Justice for New England, Equality and Fraternity to Puerto Rico, Peace to Ohio, and America to Los Angeles. Said Liberty: "My plans are private, but I'm going to live up to my name."

It will be remembered that a radical Mexican state governor named his three sons: Satan, Lucifer, and Lenin. In the American Revolution, the commander of the Hessians called his baby twins: Amerika and Kanada. But here are some popular 1940 names just discovered in Brooklyn: Nicey, Teaky, Icey, Ziggy, Kirvy, Obdulla, Alethia, Marydor, Oceana, Evclvy, Wat, Evgvinia. One family, named Orr, called their child Ordinary.

'Pauline Revere'

"Pauline Revere" in the person of Miss Elana Summers, 19, University of Wisconsin beauty queen, pictured about to mount her white horse in front of Chicago's city hall en route to Washington, D. C., with an anti-conscription bill or scroll to be presented to President Roosevelt. Her ride is sponsored by the Committee to Defend America by Keeping It Out of War. This gives but one side of the conscription problem, as proponents of the plan claim that America's interests can best be served by a universal military training program. Thereby, the Daily Worker ceased to be the official organ of the Manhattan Muscovites. Mrs. Reed, of Boston, once put in half a day's work on the Moscow subway, with a shovel, so the story went. It was said to have been a labor of love. She was then 43 years old,

Only Time Can Test 'Advantages' Of Havana Conference Agreement

Pan-American Plan for Colonies Enlarges the Scope Of Famous Monroe Doctrine and Assures Enforcement of Its Provisions.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — Although copybooks long since have disappeared and the school systems seem to have omitted the "R" from reading, writing and arithmetic, the truth of the copy lines remains indisputable. One line, "time brings changes," continues to be basic fact and it applies to nations as well as individuals. If proof were needed as to the truth of the adage, recent developments at Havana, Cuba, surely can be used.

The conference at Havana, in which the United States and 20 other American republics participated, brought into being an agreement whereby all of the nations in North will work. It can be said, however, that the idea is definite and conclusive and that any move to transfer Dutch and French Guiana to Germany will meet with resistance. The United States and its sister republics simply have said to Hitler and the others in Europe: stay on your own side of the Atlantic, we don't want you over here and you shall not come here.

So, any fair interpretation of the Havana international meeting means that (1) a principle has been established, (2) that means of supporting and enforcing that principle have been created, and (3) that any of the nations of North or South America can act against any foreign power and will do so with the agreed approval of the others. It is a powerful thing and, if it holds, there is established an entirely new solidarity within the New world.

Value of Agreement Is Highly Controversial

There are many objections possible of statement respecting this new treaty arrangement. None can foretell whether those objections have merit or not. Nor can anyone in this day say with certainty that the program will guarantee either peace or war. In most arguments that we hear in Washington discussions, claims that appear sound are advanced both for and against the value and general merit of the Havana treaty. The thing will have to be studied and will have to be in operation for a time, I believe, before anyone can make an unequivocal statement whether its advantages outweigh its disadvantages, or whether the reverse is true.

To get back to the copybook line that "time brings changes," it may be pointed out properly that the United States has bound itself to defend all of South and Central America. It may be said, moreover, that the Havana treaty expands the Monroe Doctrine beyond any of the original meaning of the statement made by President James Monroe. Or, it offers ground for argument that the United States is taking upon itself the guardianship of all of the Americas, since it is a fact that the United States navy is the only navy worthy of a name in all of the Western hemisphere.

Fate of Small Republics Has Become Very Important

These changes have taken place. Of that, there can be little doubt. But there remains the condition that confronts all of the nations of North and South America. We do not know in this country what influences are operative in South and Central America. Of course, it is known that subversive agents—Hitler and Mussolini and Stalin—are busy in Mexico. We can see various signs of the boring-from-within that is taking place in other nations. But the truth is that we have no real knowledge of how much progress has been made or whether the parasites that are within the body politic of the Latin countries have left only a shell of solidarity on the surface for us to see.

These things, if they do exist, are highly dangerous to the United States. How dangerous they are, time alone will tell, but time has brought the changes that force the United States to build something in the nature of protective fence. The question is whether that fence shall be on our frontier with Mexico and Canada, or whether it shall be a fence along the shores of the Atlantic and the Pacific, and whether the United States can build a fence at all to make trespassers keep out.

It was only a few years ago that the Washington government was sort of letting the South American republics hold their elections with gunfire and thinking nothing of it. Now, those elections are important to us. The United States cannot go down there and supervise the elections. That would be the surest way to disrupt the relations of a more or less peaceful character that exist between the various republics. Yet, anything that is done by any of those governments now, anything that affects their status in relation to any other nation in the New world, becomes a matter paramount in importance.

As I said, none can tell yet how the Havana treaty is going to work out. If it works out as planned, it has plenty of meritorious phases. If some of the South American republics kick over the traces, as they have been known to do, the Havana treaty will be just another scrap of paper. For the time being, however, the agreement is an excellent talking point, in any event. It is notice that any foreign nation had better consider the consequences before attempting to decide the fate of European possessions here.

PRESIDENT JAMES MONROE
His policy has become a tradition.

and South America, excepting Canada and the possessions of European nations, will work together in defense, military or otherwise. It was a meeting that must be placed in large print in history because it told the whole world that the Monroe Doctrine still exists and will be enforced.

The Havana conference was notable and historical in another way. It established for the first time, as a policy of the United States, a determination to use our national defense—our army, our navy, our air force—in protecting not only our own shore lines, but the shore lines of our sister nations of the Western hemisphere.

In other words, the conference which is described as "the Pan-American Agreement on Colonies," did these things: (1) it determined steps to be taken if any European possession in the Western hemisphere were threatened with transfer of sovereignty to another foreign nation; (2) it established a new base for inter-American trade and economic relations so that inroads by any European or Asiatic power will be made more difficult; (3) it prepared the way for dealing with, and the control of, agents of foreign powers seeking to carry on subversive activities against the New world.

Agreement Establishes New World Solidarity

Under this structure of international agreement, there is set up machinery which will provide something of a guardianship—a protectorate—for British and French and Dutch Guiana. The British section of that three-part country, of course, is still subject to British rule. Nobody knows exactly the status of the French and Dutch sections, since Hitler forced France to her knees and wreaked havoc with Holland.

To date, the situation is not thoroughly clear how this protectorate

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

THERE'S never a dull moment at Big Bear, Calif., these days. No sooner did 20th Century-Fox's "Brigham Young" troupe finish work on location near there than Monogram's "Queen of the Yukon" moved in.

The town has just one important street, and it's jammed nightly with bearded extras (whose beards earn a living for them) and members of the cast. Irene Rich, Charles Bickford, Melvin Lang, Dave O'Brien, and June Carlson are in the lineup.

Melvin Lang and Dave O'Brien had to stage a fight the other day; in preparation, Bickford spent several days teaching O'Brien how to avoid injuries. But—when Director Phil Rosen called "Cut!" O'Brien fell to the ground, and the company doctor found that he had a broken rib. He'd been too much excited to remember Bickford's instructions.

When young players in Hollywood get discouraged they remind themselves—and anyone who'll listen—that it takes just one good picture to make a star.

"Look at Pat O'Brien in 'Front Page,'" they'll say. "Look at Cary Grant in 'Topper'—Shirley Temple in "Little Miss Marker"—Errol Flynn in "Captain Blood"—May Rolson in "Lady for a Day."

Another name has been added to the "Look" list—it's that of Ida Lupino, who did a nice job in "The Light That Failed" and has won her spurs as a result of her "mad" scenes in Warner Brothers' "They Drive By Night." She'll co-star with John Garfield in "East of the River."

Herbert Moulton has a new idea for screen entertainment, and he hopes you're going to like it. After six months of hard work he has finished an abridged version of "Love Me Tonight," starring Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald and Myrna Loy, and originally released in 1932. It will run just 45 minutes.

Other old-time successes being considered for streamlining are "Design for Living," "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Night After Night," and "One Hour With You."

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Geraldine Fitzgerald returns to the screen to co-star with George Raft in "South of Suez" . . . Looks as if Charlie Chaplin's "The Dictator" would be released about the middle of September . . . Susanna Foster has a gold powder box which when opened plays "Fight on for U. S. C."—given her by the boys of the University of Southern California's band who worked with her in "There's Magic in Music" . . . Tyrone Power will do a series of pictures based on tales about Zorro, the California bandit—his current one, "The Californian," is a remake of the old Douglas Fairbanks "The Mark of Zorro."

FIRST-AID to the AILING HOUSE

Poor Chimney Draft.

QUESTION: My smokestack draws well when there is no wind, but does not work satisfactorily on a windy day. The chimney has been lengthened so that it is well above the roof, but that did not help. The location of the house may have something to do with it. The house is in a valley between two hills, about 50 feet taller than the house. Both hills are about 200 feet from the house. I would appreciate your advice.

Answer: The force of the wind coming down from the hills may cause a down-draft condition in the chimney. A type of revolving chimney cap, made of sheet metal, with a vane on top may help. The vane will turn the open part of the cap away from the wind, minimizing the downward sweep of the wind from the hill. Any sheet metal shop will be able to supply it.

Disintegrating Bricks.

Question: The brick on my bungalow seems to be disintegrating. Many of them had scaled off to depths of from one-eighth to one-half inch. The builder claims that all brick is more or less affected this way by the frost. He says a clear waterproofing brushed on the wall will correct this condition. Do you think this will be adequate?

Answer: A porous brick will absorb moisture, which during the winter may freeze, causing the brick to chip or scale off. Waterproofing the brick will most likely prevent the absorption. If the brick is very porous two coats may be necessary.

Sawdust and Cement Mix.

Question: I noticed in several rural publications a reference made to a floor made of cement and sawdust. What are the advantages of such construction, and what is the formula?

Answer: This form of cement mixture is still in the experimental stages. The purpose is to obtain a concrete floor that may be somewhat warmer than ordinary concrete in barns and poultry houses. Further information can be had by writing to the Extension Service Bureau, University of New Hampshire, at Durham, N. H., for Circular No. 217.

Rust Stain on Cement.

Question: Please let me know how to remove rust stains from white cement on a terrace; caused by iron furniture standing on it.

Answer: Dissolve one part of sodium citrate in six parts of water. Mix thoroughly with six parts of commercial glycerine. Mix a portion of this with enough powdered whiting to form a paste, then spread on the stain in a thick coat. When dry, replace with fresh paste. Several applications may be necessary.

Burst Boiler.

Question: When we closed our house for the winter last fall, water in the heater was not drawn off. This spring on lighting the fire, we found that the boiler had been cracked by the freezing of the water. Can this be repaired, or must I get a new heater?

Answer: Boilers are built up of sections, any one of which can be replaced. Any plumber should be able to get new sections to replace those that are broken. It will not be necessary to get an entirely new heater; replacing the burst sections will be much less expensive.

Tarnished Brass.

Question: What can be done with old brass fireplace fittings and grate, which have become tarnished and darkened through the years? I would like to make it look bright.

Answer: The tarnish can be removed by washing with ordinary vinegar in which has been dissolved as much salt as will be taken up, followed by rinsing with clear water. Use any good brand of metal polish for polishing. Remove traces of the polishing material by wiping with benzine, (be careful of fire.) Apply a coat of clear lacquer. This will prevent the brass from tarnishing.

British Man French Craft

'England Expects Every Man . . .'

Doing his duty for his country, John Fiske, a 15-year-old lad, takes great pride in showing King George of England his handiwork during a visit by the king to a munitions factory near London.

With German air raids and submarine attacks on shipping convoys threatening serious shortages of vital supplies, the British navy has put into active service a number of French war craft taken under control after the French-German armistice. British crews aided by French volunteers are manning the craft. Typical of the ships put into service are these shown above, left to right, an escort vessel, a destroyer and four submarines.

Fluorescent Lighting

Has 'Daytime' Effect

Fluorescent lighting, already widely used in stores, art museums, theaters and restaurants, will open up a hitherto untouched field of decorative colored lighting in the home of tomorrow.

So prophesies a prominent United States lighting consultant.

With fluorescent lighting augmenting, but not necessarily rivaling the present type of incandescent lamps, we may look for them to go hand in hand with each other in the homes of the future to achieve that soft warm daylight effect which best brings out the shades and tints of our home furnishings. Architects and builders already are beginning to appreciate the possibilities of fluorescent lighting in the home.

Because a daylight effect can be achieved easily with fluorescent lamps, they are especially effective for lighting bathroom mirrors, for powder rooms where makeup can be applied to look as it will look in daylight, for lighting pictures and tapestries, artificial windows, coves, niches and for unusual lighting effects in halls and living rooms. They also are proving acceptable for lighting work surfaces such as kitchen tables or desks.

Fluorescent light is achieved by transforming invisible ultra-violet rays into visible light by means of various chemicals. The chemicals are sprayed on the inside of the tubular lamps, and by the proper selection of chemicals, various colors are obtained. The lamps are available in the following standard colors, daylight, white, gold, red, blue, pink and green.

The new lamps are more efficient, producing white light, for example, while using one-third the electrical energy required for ordinary lamps. In such colors as blue and green, fluorescent lamps are up to 30 times as efficient as the incandescent variety.

Fluorescent lamps have a longer rated life and the colors endure for the life of the bulb, but the cost of the entire installation is higher since much of the equipment has not yet entered the mass production stage and might still be classed as tailor-made. The lamp itself costs approximately 10 times as much as the incandescent type does now, and each bulb must have its own operating mechanism, which sells for about $1.50.

"Mother gave my father a great deal of happiness while she was his wife, the Major, too, I suppose, though I was with them very little. Robert adores her." Gay changed her position and laughed. "How solemn we're being! We weren't solemn today. Did you enjoy seeing New York in a snowstorm?"

"I enjoy being with you wherever you are, though 'enjoy' is much too polite a word."

"Those first few days at the cabin—We were so polite to each other."

"I can barely remember. I wish we were there now."

"So do I. Thinking of the woods in a snow-storm makes all this seem like a stage-setting, doesn't it? Do you remember when you asked me if I would love you when we were together in New York?"

"Yes—" He held her closer. "I was afraid to come."

"But you aren't afraid now."

"No. But I can't believe it's true."

"Dear, dear!" She lifted her head from his shoulder and, smiling, drew an exaggerated sigh. "Convincing you is certainly up-hill work. You're the most obstinate person I know."

"I guess you're right. I loved you pretty stubbornly for six years."

"It has its advantages, hasn't it?" She looked at him gravely, her eyes soft and bright. "I love you," she said.

He drew her close to him. "I love you," he said, his lips against her cheek.

At a repeated sound from behind them, Gay drew away somewhat hastily. John, too, turned. The Japanese house-boy, his face discreetly expressionless, stood just inside the room.

"What is it, Suki?" Gay asked. "Company come, please. Gentleman, ladies call up from below. Say send down elevator, please."

"Good-Heaven!" She looked at him in dismay. "I might have known. Who is it, Suki?"

"Miss Wales. Mrs. Howard. Lady not say gentleman's name."

"Send the elevator down."

The house-boy bowed himself out of the room. She turned to John. Her face cleared. She laughed. "You look frightened."

"I'm terrified."

"If I refused to let them meet you, they'd think you weren't presentable. I want them to meet you. I'm proud of you. You look grand in evening clothes. You ought to wear them always."

"I might get a job as a waiter."

He caught her hand. "I won't know what to say to them."

"Idiot! What do you say to me?"

"I tell you I love you."

Her brows lifted. "You can omit that. Don't be frightened. They're really quite harmless."

"If you could coach me a little—"

"Oh John!" She kissed him, but absently, he thought. Her expression was thoughtful, a little apprehensive as she pulled him up from the davenport, as they walked through soft glow of concealed lighting, through the frosty glitter of the Christmas tree toward the door to greet her friends.

CHAPTER VIII

The last record in the electric Victrola whirled to a stop. John led the small vivacious brunettes with whom he had been dancing to the davenport facing the fire where he had sat with Gay.

"You're a wonderful dancer," she said, settling herself in a swirl of scarlet chiffon.

"You sound surprised," John smiled. "We aborigines who live in Maine don't confine our amusement to war dances, by any means."

She glanced at him doubtfully, then laughed. "The mystery is clearing up," she said.

"Mystery?"

"Well, we have wondered, you know," she went on with an air of artless frankness too deliberate to be entirely sincere. "I mean, Gay goes dashing off into the wilds and then comes home and breaks her engagement and won't tell us anything about you except that you're a doctor and her god-father's nephew. You can't imagine how curious we've been to meet you."

Here it was again. John had been obliged to respond to that approach many times during the evening as Gay's friends had arrived and departed in restless, animated groups.

"You must find me very disappointing," he said, making no effort to re-phrase a reply which, so far, had appeared to be adequate.

"Not at all." Her bright brown eyes sparkled at him through curling lashes. "Of course most of us met you at Gay's debutante party but we didn't—"

"—pay any attention to me?" He felt that his smile was becoming fixed.

"I'd meant to say that we didn't dream all this romance was brewing. It is romantic, you know. I mean you never expect such a thing to happen to one of your friends."

On the surface, at least, it was all very friendly. Perhaps he only imagined that under their apparently casual acceptance of him, these friends of Gay's were deliberately making him feel an outsider in subtle ways of which he was conscious but which he could not define. That was natural, he told himself. Todd Janeway was one of them. His name had been mentioned, during the evening, in connection with Christmas Eve of last year, with reference to the Army-Navy football game, in casual reminiscence.

Todd's sister, Ellen, was here, the slight graceful girl in the tailored hat who, coming in with the good-looking red-haired boy in tweeds, had explained that they were on their way out to the Janeway country place for Christmas.

"Don't you adore this apartment?" she was asking when he gave her his attention.

"It's very—unusual."

"I'm crazy about it. I've been trying to persuade Mums and Dads to take a pent-house but they say they can't afford to sell the family mausoleum even if anybody could be persuaded to buy it. We're practically paupers," she added cheerfully. "Dads is loaded with foreign bonds and you know what they're worth now."

John wanted, very sincerely, to understand, if he could the point-of-view of these sleek young people for, though she was more intelligent than the girl who chattered beside him, it must, of necessity, be Gay's. It was a rare person who remained uninfluenced by the thought and behavior of his or her companions.

You never entirely escaped the environment in which you had been reared. You were bound to the past by a thousand tenuous ties of habit, prejudice, affection, ties of which you were unaware, perhaps, until, when confronted by some opposite ideas, you felt them tugging you back into the safety of familiar ideas, values, habits. He'd felt them tugging when . . .

"I beg your pardon," he said, warned by a sustained upward inflection in his companion's voice that she had asked a question.

"It doesn't matter." He thought that she looked a little bored. Her eyes flicked past him toward the piano where the girl with auburn hair was singing, apparently for her own amusement since the group clustered about her continued to talk in staccato tones which carried across the room. "I asked you if you and Gay were spending tomorrow here or at her father's place in the country."

"In the country, I think." He wanted to add something to that. He wanted to apologize more fully for his inattention. What a dull lot she must think him. Not that he cared, except for Gay. He was as relieved as he felt his companion must be when he saw a group of four people come in from the hall and cross the room toward the davenport.

"We've been out on the terrace looking at the view," Tory Wales said as she came up to them. She dropped down on the davenport and a white fur coat, so soft that it crumpled like velvet as it fell, slid down over her bare brown shoulders and back.

"Your slippers are wet, I'm afraid," her companion, the burly but well-groomed young Englishman who was her fiancé, said.

"Don't fuss, Hal. You can't kill an Indian with a little snow." She leaned back against the apricot leather of the upholstery and held up two fingers. Her fiancé put a cigarette between them.

The girl in red laughed. "Don't you two talk the same language?" she asked.

"Well, you must admit that my English is a little different from Hal's," Tory Wales said, her light eyes, startling in contrast with her skin, twinkling with derisive humor which reminded him of Kate. "When his family was here in October we practically had to use deaf and dumb signals. I'm learning, though." She glanced up at her fiancé who smiled as though he found her very amusing, relaxed against the upholstery, graceful legs crossed, and made a half turn toward John, seated between her and the girl in red, who, now that reinforcements had arrived, showed no inclination to leave. "When are you planning to locate in New York, Dr. Houghton?"

"I don't expect to locate in New York," John said, a little startled at the question.

"Oh, aren't you going to practice here?" the girl in red asked. "We naturally assumed that you were."

"Why 'naturally'?" John asked smiling, but with the uncomfortable feeling that he was being deliberately quizzed.

"Well, Gay's connections are here. We thought—that's very disappointing." The girl in red gave a ripple of laughter which held, John thought, some confusion. "I was planning to develop a chronic ailment. After all, one must be loyal to one's friends."

"I appreciate your interest," John said, "but I shouldn't have a private practice in any event."

"Dr. Houghton is a scientist, darling," Tory Wales said speaking across him to the girl in red.

"That's very interesting." The Englishman lowered his glass to look at John.

"Are you working with a foundation?" the boy in the tweed suit asked.

"Nothing so impressive," John laughed briefly. "Just now I'm assisting a physician in Portland. General practice. I'm hoping—"

The girl in red interrupted with a request for a cigarette. John felt both irritated and relieved. He didn't want to talk of his work, especially but that was preferable to more personal references. In the flurry of providing the girl at his right with a cigarette, he glanced toward the group at the piano. Gay turned, as he watched, started across the room with Janice Howard. The others followed.

"Jan and Rickey think they must go," Gay said, coming up to the davenport.

"You needn't, Tory," Janice Howard said. "We can call a cab. But if we're to join the family festivities tomorrow, steps must be taken at once."

"We must go too, Tommy," Ellen Janeway rose. "We're meeting the midnight train in from Chicago. Francie and Ned are arriving. Gay, maybe we'll see you in the country tomorrow."

"I want to see Francie and Ned. Are they bringing the babies?"

"Oh, yes. We're driving them out to the country tonight. The roads are fairly clear. Todd phoned—" She stopped and her soft color deepened.

"We're shoving off, Hal," Tory Wales said quickly. She rose and shrugged into the white fur coat.

"We're going home and hang up our stockings. Maybe you'll get a bale of cats in yours, if you're good," she added, linking her arm through the arm of her fiancé.

"Good-night, Gay. Good-night, Dr. Houghton. We'll see you Wednesday evening."

"Good-night, Dr. Houghton," Janice Howard extended a slender hand. "It's been pleasant to meet you."

"Good-night, everybody," Gay said. "Merry Christmas. Good-night—"

John was standing at one of the long windows when Gay came into the drawing-room. She went to him, moving swiftly, noiselessly over the rugs which Suki had replaced.

"What do you see?" she asked, standing beside him. "Are you watching for Santa Claus? He doesn't come in a boat."

He turned when she spoke, glancing at her, looked out and down through the window again.

"M'chattan is an island, isn't it?" he said in a detached, distant voice. "I've never been able to believe it. But seeing water down under the windows—"

"John—" Her breath caught in her throat. He looked so unapproachable standing there with his back to the room, in darkness, now, except for the blue and silver dazzle of the Christmas tree, the restrained glow of the birch-log fire. She slipped her hand into the pocket where his was thrust, laid her cheek against his arm.

"It must be colder," he said steadily. "The snow isn't melting. See it on the deck of that scow there under the light."

"John—Darling—I know what you're thinking. Don't!"

He looked at her then and she saw the unhappiness in his eyes. His lips moved as though he meant to speak but no sound came.

"John," she said quietly, "look at me."

He turned, silent, unsmiling, waiting for her to continue.

"Have you changed your mind?" she asked steadily. "Are you trying to tell me—?" Her voice faltered, trembled, was stilled.

"Oh Gay, no!" He made a despairing gesture. "I'm trying to see this thing clearly. We can't rush into it blindly."

"Can't we be comfortable, at least," she said wearily.

He followed her to the davenport before the fire, sat at a little distance from her.

"Cigarette?" she asked.

"Thank you." He struck a match to light hers. As he bent toward her, she saw that his expression had softened. "You're tired," he said gently.

"A little."

He did not touch her, though she willed him to with all her strength. When his cigarette was lit, he sat back against the upholstery. "I don't wonder," he said bitterly. "You've carried me on your shoulders all evening and I'm a pretty heavy load."

"Don't be an idiot, darling."

"You watched me, you watched your friends, as though you were afraid—"

"I was afraid."

"That I'd do or say something that would humiliate you?"

"No, John. That they would try to make you feel uncomfortable, an outsider, someone who didn't belong."

He turned to her, puzzled.

"Deliberately?" he asked.

She nodded.

"I sensed something of the sort."

"You can't understand it, I suppose."

"I'm trying. I've been trying all evening." He crushed out his cigarette. "It's the assurance that wealth gives, I suppose. These friends of yours who were here tonight—"

"They can be loyal, too," she said quickly, more defensively than she knew. "It would have been loyalty to Todd if they'd been unpleasant to you, tonight."

"But what about you, and your cousin?"

"He—I—" She was silent.

"Sixth Sense" Governs

Guesswork Accuracy

A sixth sense—extrasensory perception—governs to a certain degree the accuracy of guesswork, tests conducted by Columbia university psychologists indicate.

The research workers, after conducting a series of 1,000 tests with hidden cards, said even the average man or woman had some sort of mental prompting which tended to bring forth higher-than-chance guesswork on the part of some of the subjects.

"Something other than chance is at work," the psychologists said, but offered no opinion as to what the extra-chance factor might be.

In every test the cards were shuffled and set out of range of sight and hearing, and in about half of the tests the subjects were a quarter of a mile away.

The records indicate, contrary to chance expectation, that there is a definite relation between the scores of some of the sets of cards. Control series and statistical analysis suggests that something other than chance is at work. There are several phases of the distributions of the date which are difficult to interpret and it is considered wise to continue the experiment, using new subjects as well as continuing with the old.

FARMER BROWN'S BOY SETTLES MATTERS

FARMER BROWN'S BOY came into the Old Orchard whistling. It was good to hear someone who seemed happy and wanted everybody else to feel happy. The truth is there had been very little happiness in the Old Orchard since Bully, the English Sparrow, had moved there. Perhaps he and Mrs. Bully were happy. Probably they were. But if they were they had a funny way of showing it, for it seemed as if they quarrelled with each other all the time when they had no one else to quarrel with. All the other birds were unhappy, because of the noisy ways and quarrelsome dispositions of Bully and Mrs. Bully.

So it was good to hear the whistle of Farmer Brown's boy, for there had been no song or whistle for days and days. He thumped on the tree in which Drummer the Woodpecker had his home and laughed to see Mrs. Drummer come rushing out, as if she thought the world was coming to an end. "Didn't mean to scare you to death; just wanted to know if you were at home," said he. "I wonder if Skimmer the Swallow has babies by this time. He ought to have. I believe I'll pay him a call."

"Hello!" he exclaimed. "What are you doing there?"

Straight across the Old Orchard he walked to the tree in which Skimmer had built his nest in the summer. Just imagine how surprised he was when, as he drew near, Mrs. Bully and not Mrs. Skimmer appeared in the doorway to see what was going on. The whistle of Farmer Brown's boy stopped abruptly. "Hello!" he exclaimed. "What are you doing there? I must have a look into this. I certainly must. The last time I was here Skimmer was living in that house. I wonder if you stole it from him the way you steal grain from my chickens. It would be just like your impudence, too. You may be all right in the country you came from, but you're a nuisance here in America."

He walked straight over to the tree where the nest was. Such a fuss as Bully and Mrs. Bully did

Fashion Hints for The College Girl

While the dress of the college girl must assume a casual look, yet in reality it must observe most meticulous detail that insures for it style distinction.

You will thrill with delight at the sight of the new featherweight jersey dresses styled in classic simplicity but spectacular at that because of the fringed shawl of the self-jersey that is thrown nonchalantly about one's shoulders.

And then there are the newest-of-the-new pinafore frocks. Can imagination go beyond this—a navy dress with a bright red pinafore of sheer wool with pleated apron skirt and a jumper top all carried out in demure little girl fashion yet skillfully tuned to teen age wear? You will want to include one of the new and clever drawstring models done in jersey. They are fitted to waist with drawstrings that tie in front. Another suggestion is a plaid skirt with suede shirt in bright monotone.

make! Once all the other little people in the Old Orchard would have felt, oh, so sorry for anyone whose nest Farmer Brown's boy had found, but now there wasn't so much as a single peep of sympathy, although Farmer Brown's boy didn't know it, many eyes were watching him, and for the first time there was hope and just fear in them. Fear, great fear, and sorrow and anger were all mixed up together in the voices of Bully and Mrs. Bully as they flew about frantically, but Farmer Brown's boy paid no attention to them. He slipped a hand into the hole in the tree where the nest was, and when it came out it brought the nest with it.

"One, two, three, four, five, six," counted he as he spread the nest open and looked at the speckled eggs, while Bully and Mrs. Bully cried as if their hearts would break. "If these belonged to anybody but you I wouldn't touch them," he declared. "As it is, I'm obliged to take them. I'm sorry, but it is so. If I didn't I would prove myself a poor friend of all the other birds in the Old Orchard. The Old Orchard needs them and it doesn't need you. You don't do any good yourself, or if you do it is so little that it doesn't count, and you drive away the birds who do do good. I suppose I ought to get my gun and shoot you, but I can't do that. You are dirty, noisy, useless nuisances, but you are no cowards, and I just can't hurt you. I suppose you can't help being what you are. But I can't have you driving out my other friends, so you can't nest here."

With this he tore up the nest and walked off with the six eggs. Jenny Wren sighed with relief. "Now they certainly will go away," said she.

Paisley Cotton

No wonder many leading designers are choosing to fashion their most prized evening gowns of delectable cotton weaves. Some of the new cotton prints are simply breathtaking in their rich colorings and patternings and versatile textures. The model pictured is a perfect reason why cottons are so beloved this season. For this adorable evening gown the designer chooses a radiantly beautiful cotton paisley print, its rich glowing exotic coloring making it ideal for the college girl who wants to look stunning and individual at the opening college prom. The colors are red, blue, and green with the skirt highlighted with a ruching in bright scarlet that travels in a double row about the skirt hemline.

Cool and Delightful New Shirtwaister

PERFECT to put on and wear right now in flat crepe, silk-print or spun rayon, this beautifully cut shirtwaister fashion will be a cool delight on the hottest days of summer. No. 8727 will look so crisp and fresh, in striped linen, polka dot silk or brilliant white sharkskin. And it will feel comfortable and unhampering, because the lines are so simple and free. The bodice can be fastened with three buttons and turned back in narrow, deep revers, or buttoned almost to the throat, with shallow revers.

Why not have it both ways, since it's so very easy to make? There's practically no detailing to it—just a few gathers beneath the yoke and darts at the waistline. The circular skirt has a lovely, youthful swing.

Pattern No. 8727 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 1/2 yards of 39-inch material without nap. Send order to:

Some of the new color contrast suggestions offered are olive green with mauve, brown with pale blue, plum with pale blue, dark brown with toffee tan, red with hunter's green and so on and on with the color spectrum fashion will make merry this fall.

The schemes are worked out with monotone tweeds coupled with plaids and stripes. Lots of plaid is on the way for fall. It will be tailored into long coats, into separate jackets and for the costume entire.

Yes, and only two ways—before and after it happens! Instead of enduring these dull, tired, head-achy days and then having to take an emergency cathartic—why not KEEP regular with Kellogg's All-Bran? Household News

By Eleanor Howe

Salads, in summer, are as important as swimming or tennis, or golf! Nothing tastes quite so good as a cool, crisp mixture of fresh greens, or fruits, or vegetables, served with just the proper dressing. The very word is refreshing—like a drink of cold, sparkling spring water after a long and dusty hike.

Very light salads may be served as an appetizer first course, if desired. Dinner salads, too, are light; they may be served as a separate course, or with the main course of the meal. For luncheon, salads may be somewhat heavier, because the main luncheon dish is likely to be light. Many times, a luncheon salad is a whole meal in itself, served with bread or crisp rolls, a beverage, and dessert. And there are many times in informal luncheons and dinners, when salads do duty for dessert.

What makes a good salad? Plenty of crisp, fresh greens, a blend of fruits or vegetables or fish, a zesty dressing and a dash of color, say the experts. To make salads appetizing and refreshing, as they should be, everything must be fresh, crisp, and well chilled. Greens are freshened in ice water for half an hour, well drained in a salad basket or bag, and left in the refrigerator to chill. To prepare head lettuce for salads, cut out the core or stem with a pointed knife, and let cold water from the faucet run into this opening. The water forces the leaves apart and cleans them.

Use other greens besides lettuce for garnishing salads, and in mixed green salads, as well. Watercress, tender inside leaves of raw spinach, endive, escarole and romaine are good for variety. Add cubed, leftover meats to green salad, for a hearty main dish. And for hot days, plan fruit salad plates for lunch or supper. Peeled oranges, sliced and served with fresh, whole berries, with lettuce, watercress or endive for a garnish, make an attractive and refreshing meal.

Golden Fruit Salad.

(Serves 6)

1 tablespoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
1 cup juice from canned pineapple (hot)

Few grains salt
½ cup orange juice
¼ cup vinegar
1 orange (cut in pieces)
1 cup raw carrot (coarsely grated)
1½ cup crushed pineapple
Soak gelatin in cold water and dissolve in hot pineapple juice. Add sugar, salt, orange juice and vinegar. Cool, and when beginning to stiffen, add remaining ingredients. Turn into wet mold and chill until firm. Unmold on lettuce. Serve with mayonnaise or fruit salad dressing.

per and bay leaf, and bring to a boil. Strain. Dissolve softened gelatin in the hot liquid. Allow to cool until the mixture begins to thicken. Fold in onion, celery and lemon juice and pour into individual ring molds. Chill until firm; just before serving unmold on beds of watercress or lettuce. Fill centers of salad rings with large flakes of salmon. Serve with salad dressing.

Appetizers.

Cut the crusts from slices of very fresh bread. Spread bread with cream cheese generously mixed with paprika. Roll as for a jelly roll and slice in very thin slices. Brush with melted butter, toast lightly, and serve immediately.

French Dressing.

(Makes 1½ cups)

½ clove garlic (grated)
4 lumps sugar
1 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon paprika
1 cup oil
½ cup vinegar
Grate garlic on lump sugar, and let stand before using, for several hours. When ready to mix, place all ingredients in order listed in jar. Shake vigorously and serve.

Pompadour Felt

Whether the hat be wide of brim, a tiny toque, a draped turban or a dramatic beret, milliners are tempering them to the new pompadour hairdo. The model pictured accents sophisticated simplicity which is so important just now. Its lavish brim with neat grosgrain ribbon band and short streamers at the back are eminently style-right.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

WHEN we last heard of Marty and Bill the curved bottom shelf of that old buffet had not been used. Well, Bill made it into a cornice board for the bathroom window, and painted it blue. Then Marty went into action on curtains to match.

Grandmother is an expert at doing old-fashioned candle wicking, so together they made the tufted curtains illustrated. They used plain white muslin marked off diagonally in three-inch squares. They found the blue they wanted for the tufting in a soft string type of cotton yarn. The sketch tells you the rest. The dipping is what really turned the clipped stitches into tufts; then the curtains were stretched into shape to dry but were not ironed. All this about curtains has given Gram the most wonderful idea for something for a bride's kitchen shower that is coming off soon. It is pretty clever, we think. Watch for it, next week.

CHAPMAN SISTERS GREETED BY LARGE AUDIENCE AT NORTH WATERFORD

The Chapman Sisters gave a very pleasing entertainment of readings, songs and dances to the people of North Waterford and vicinity at the I. O. O. F. Hall Saturday evening. Notwithstanding that there are many social events on Saturday nights there was a very large and appreciative audience present.

The young ladies were generous in giving encores in response to substantial applause. The Tift Orchestra furnished the music, which was very brilliant.

The same company will appear at the Locke Mills Town Hall this Thursday evening, and plans for other presentations are under way. The Chapman Sisters are well known New York entertainers and are spending the summer at Songo Pond.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to thank my friends, neighbors and organizations of Bethel and West Bethel for cards, letters and gifts sent me during my recent illness.
